WHY HE WAS BRAVE.

Faced an Angry Mob.

A recent narrative in Youth's Companion recalls to one of its readers something which occurred a few years ago, when a mob surrounded the courthouse in C-, and did considerable damage; among other things setting fire to a part of the structure and destroying valuable records. EARLY ENGLISH COACHES.

Their Introduction Said to Have Been Due to Queen Eleanor.

The introduction of coaches in England is credited to Queen Eleanor, who died in 1291. Her death was thus amiably discussed in a ballad of the time, entitled "A Warning Piece to England Against Pride and Wickednesse, being the fall of Queen Eleanor, wife to Edward, King of England, who, for her pride, by God's

She was the first that did invent, In coaches brave to ride; She was the first that brought this land To deadly sin and pride.

Later testimony, no less direct, credits the first introduction of coaches to Sir Thomas Chamberlayne, English ambassador to the court of Charles V. of Spain; and again to the earl of Rutland, for whom Walter Rippon, Queen Elizabeth's subsequent coachmaker, is recorded to have built the "first coach that ever was seen in England, Anno Domini,

Thus litutenant had returned home, I and were wrapped in grass cloth and | Sir Philip Sidney risked his knightly reputation by appearing in a coach himself fiscally. Shrewsbury in his wagon, "with his trumpeter blowynge, very joyful to behold." Good Bishop Hall, in his 'Satires," published shortly afterwards, took a less joyful view:

Is't not a shame to see a groome Sit perched in an idle chariot roome, That were not meet some panel to bestride. Sursingled to a galled hackney's hide?

In spite of such criticisms, the use of coaches grew apace, so that young Shakespeare could earn a livelihood by holding the coach horses of the ladies that drove to the Globe theater. In 1601 a bill was actually brought in parliament "to restrayn the excessive use of Coaches within this realm of England."—Automobile Magazine.

A SKULL BANJO.

Grewsome Musical Instrument Made by the Paraguay Indians.

Skull banjos are the product of the small country of Paraguay. The Indians of ancient times were constantly engaged in warfare, and their primary aim when thus engaged was to capture the chief of the opposing side. When captured this personage was carried to their camp and there cruelly murdered, and it was from his body that this grewsome, curious musical instrument was made.

After the skull was thoroughly dried the top was cut entirely off. Over the opening thus made a piece of skin taken from the body was tightly stretched in the manner of a drum. In the back of the skull the two femors of the legs were inserted. These bones were so trimmed that ends of these bones were joined together by one of the ribs from the skull to the rib which connected the A citizen of St. Louis, looking femors strings were tightly stretched.
